TIMES CHANGE.

A columnist in yesterday's Daily expressed the opinion that Friday's Intercompany sports meet saw the dawn of a new era in sport at McGill. He foresees increased participation in sport and greater enjoyment for those taking part, since the general idea will now be friendly competition instead of the intense rivalry that accompanied Intercollegiate athletics.

We can remember the first column we ever wrote for the Daily, when after much searching for the right word, crossing out and rewriting we finally pounded out a plea for less emphasis on athletics for the few experts and more on sport for the average student. Those few hundred words created little excitement, a few acquaintances remarked sadly or rudely on the depths to which the Daily had descended in order to fill up its pages but otherwise the column met vast disinterest and the average student continued to spend his Saturday afternoons exercising his lungs and not much else, up at Molson stadium.

Now, as Glen points out, things have changed radically and with a rush. However, from this angle, it would seem that this apparently general interest in sport which now prevails, is not due solely to the change in type of competition, but rather to the new system of organization. Formerly, when an Intramural Track and Field meet was scheduled, the Daily faithfully announced it, and night after night, reporters tried to satisfy a harassed Night Editor's plea for an advance on the Track and Field meet that would have all the facts correct and would intrigue shoals of potential track stars into turning out for the meet.

Every once in a while, a story would come out with all names spelled correctly and no statements that Joe Doakes (a sprinter, definitely out of the meet due to an injury) was expected to star in the pole vault. The Editor might admit that he was pleased, but entries in the events never were very numerous. The track coaches and a few faithful competitors worked hard to arouse general interest in the meet, with some help from the rather haphazardly elected sports representatives of the faculties but the usual student reaction to pleas in the Daily and on notice boards was "Oh, I think I'll catch up on my notes that day" or some such thought.

GETTING THEM OUT.

Now the platoon sports representative comes up, says "You've got long legs, I'll put you down for the sprints" and being surrounded by others who've already discovered that they're down for something, the sprinter-to-be says yes and later discovers to his surprise that he can run and that training will cut down his time.

Actually the system is not quite so haphazard as described above but the general idea was correct. We'll predict here and now that if the same brisk efficient system of rounding up competitors is used all year and more important, if schedules are arranged so that there are no cases of one company supposed to play another when most of its men are in lectures or labs then sport at McGill will certainly hit a new high, so far as number and interest of competitors is concerned.

Dr. Moritz J. Bonn to Speak On International Problems

British Lecturer Holds Chair at London School of Economics

Dr. Moritz J. Bonn, at present Visiting Professor in the Department of Economics and Political Science at McGill University, will deliver a public lecture in Room 44 of the Arts Building, on Monday evening, October 28th, at 8.30 p.m., entitled "Living Space," in which he will deal with present international problems. This meeting is open to all students as well as the general public.

Professor Bonn, who delivered a very popular lecture in Moyle Hall in November, 1939, is a naturalized British citizen, who was formerly Rector Magnificus of the College of Commerce, Berlin. From 1914-1917 he was Visiting Professor at the University of California, Berkeley, California; he has also been visiting professor for various periods at the University of Wisconsin, Cornell University, Leland Stanford University, and several other well known universities. Since 1933, he has filled a Chair at the London School of Economics, where he has been working in conjunction with Sir William Beveridge and Professor Lionel Robbins on studies concerning the changing structure of capitalist society, and is at present writing a book on this subject. In the diplomatic sphere Professor Bonn served as unofficial adviser on economic matters to the British Embassy in Washington for some time.

Throughout his active career Professor Bonn has published several successful books among which are included "Economics and Politics" in 1930, "An American Experiment" in 1933, and more recently "Wealth, Welfare or War," released in 1939. He will conduct a Seminar in Economics dealing with "Inflation" at the university throughout the coming session.

Somnambulists Hold Session In German 4
Mr. Beck Begins Weekly Lecture at 8 a.m.

By C.A.B.

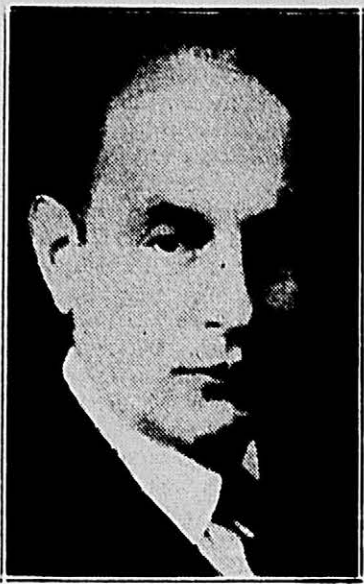

"Did you ever see a dream walking?" Well, Mr. Beck of the German Department is liable to be a severe case of somnambulist hallucinations when he calls the roll at his German 4 lecture tomorrow morning at 8.

Not that Mr. Beck can help it. He was forced into these drastic measures when he discovered that there was at least one objection raised to each lecture hour he proposed within the regular college schedule. Ordinarily the class was held at 5-6 on Mondays.

Somewhat abashed at the thought of cancelling his weekly one hour German scientific reading course because his fifteen students could not agree upon a common hour, Mr. Beck picked fifty-five minutes which could conflict with but one course: sleep.

Sleep raised its ugly head in protest, but fifteen men in their proper senses and in broad daylight voted to hold the weekly lecture Friday between 8-9.

BR. WEST INDIANS MEET TOMORROW

New Society Will Promote Friendship Among Members

A meeting of the British West Indian Society will be held in the Union this Friday at 8.00 p.m. This newly-organized society plans to become affiliated to the Students' Society; its principal aims are to encourage prospective McGill students and to foster unity amongst West Indian students now at McGill.

The first meeting of the West Indian Society was held on October 13; the meeting to be held this Friday will be the Society's second meeting. At the former meeting J. M. A. Salibus was elected President (by acclamation), George Ling, Vice-President; Eric G. James, Secretary; John Strollmeyer, Treasurer and Robert A. C. Lewis was elected Publicity Manager.

The British West Indian Society aims to communicate with prospective McGill students in the British West Indies; and to promote friendship, co-operation and unity amongst those here. Furthermore the executives hope to utilize the Society as an instrument whereby the British West Indian students may become better and more intimately acquainted with the mass of McGill students

SOCIETE FRANCAISE MEETS TODAY IN RVC

La Societe Francaise will hold its first meeting this afternoon at a 4 o'clock tea in the R.V.C. Common Room. The program is designed to welcome Freshettes, and to tell them of the club's plans for the year. There will be a pianist and soloist, and the president, Frances Cox, announced that any co-eds interested in the French language and culture are particularly invited to attend. MEETS IN UNION

Professor Hemmeon to Comment on Addresses

The first meeting of the Political Economy Club will be held this evening at 8 o'clock in the Union when the members gather to hear a paper on "Is Conscription of Wealth and Manpower Desirable?" The paper will be given by Mr. Lucien Croteau, secretary to Mayor Houde, and Gui Caron, student in Economics.

Professor J. C. Hemmeon, Honorary President of the club and head of the Department of Economics, will comment on the papers after they have been read. Following his criticism there will be a general discussion.

The membership in the club is limited to all male students who are taking courses in economics. The executive has expressed the hope that all who are qualified for membership will turn up at this first meeting. There will be a charge of ten cents to cover the cost of refreshments served after the meeting.

The executive of the organization has outlined a series of papers on topics of interest to students of economics. The topics listed include "The Next American President," "Socialized Medicine," "Distribution of National Income," "Trade Unionism in Canada," and "Canada and the Next Peace."

The Political Economy Club, the second oldest on the campus proposes to call seven meetings during this year. At these gatherings papers will be read by undergraduates and guest speakers qualified by study or profession to address such an audience.

The dates of the meetings, excluding the first, have not yet been determined.

TWENTIETH SEASON

First Play Will Be Comedy; Will Announce Title

Tomorrow at 4.30 in the Union Grill-room will be held the opening meeting of the twentieth season of the Players' Club. The Club is carrying on in spite of the war, said Bob Thomson, Vice-President; in fact, in this time when recreation and entertainment are more important than ever to relieve tension, the club is most determined to make its season a success.

Anyone interested in the Drama is asked to turn out to the meeting, especially Freshmen, and others new to the College. It is pointed out that important parts are often given to newcomers; and there are equal opportunities also in the more technical side of play, presentation, set-designing, make-up, and so on.

At the meeting tomorrow, a new President will be elected; for Andy Dixon, last year's Executive is now on Active Service. It is interesting to note that the Presidents both of a year ago and of the year before that are also with the C.A.S.F., Stirling Ferguson with the Navy, Ambrose Saunders with the Artillery.

Although the title of the first play to be presented has not yet been announced, it is to be a light comedy, a worthy successor, it is hoped to the Club's former success, "French Without Tears."

There will be members of the Executive in the Clubroom in the Union at all times this week so that any prospective member will be able to come down and discuss any phase of the Club's activities in which he is interested.

student bodies of the two faculties and explained to some extent the activities of their societies.

Major Field Addresses Group

The main speaker of the evening, Major Field, was the last to speak. The Commanding Officer of the McGill Training Battalion expressed his pleasure at the opportunity to address those who more usually heard his voice only when giving commands and congratulated the boys on their "excellent" showing on the parade ground. After giving his audience some idea of his own adventurous life and how he entered the army at seventeen and was discharged as medically unfit, with the rank of acting major at twenty-one, the Major proceeded to the discussion of army discipline which he regarded as essential to organization. In closing Major Field pointed out that if officers seemed remote and unfeeling characters it is only because the great number with which they must deal makes personal contacts well nigh impossible. "Your officers," he said, "wish only to whip you into a condition you can be proud of, and which will testify to their ability to train men."

At the close of the Major's speech the boys applauded vigorously and Bob Spencer thanked the speakers. Immediately afterwards all went upstairs to join in the singing of college songs while awaiting the Freshettes to complete their entertainment so that the dancing might begin.

Successful Banquet Held By Freshmen and Freshettes

Mrs. Roscoe Stresses Duty to State In Address

"Freshettes, stand up straight, don't look at the boys, and be sure to keep your shoe-laces tied." With this old advice of Dean Irwin's, Mrs. Roscoe, Warden of R.V.C., began her address to the Freshies at last night's dinner in the Union.

In the candle-lit Hallowe'en atmosphere of the grill-room, Mrs. Roscoe spoke in what she termed her first opportunity to say something serious to the class of '41 as a whole. "The times," said Mrs. Roscoe, "make seriousness imperative." Mrs. Roscoe remarked that as members of a democratic state, we feel we have a right to mould our own lives. That the Freshettes have had an opportunity to realize this hope is shown by the fact that they are in College. But, she stated, besides this duty to ourselves, we have a duty to the State, a fact which has perhaps been over-emphasized, but is nevertheless true. We have to do our part, said Mrs. Roscoe, in continuing the life of the campus, when our men are leaving the laboratories, professions and business world. Here is our opportunity to

Major Field Speaks To Freshmen At Banquet

The freshman-freshette dinner and dance, last event of the season, planned by the Freshman-Freshette Committee, held last night in the Union, gave the freshmen an opportunity to hear from some of the more prominent leaders in campus life, and later, while awaiting the start of the dancing, to exhibit their vocal abilities in college songs. The chief speaker of the evening was Major Field, Commanding Officer of the McGill Reserve Training Battalion, who spoke briefly of the training scheme at McGill and its value. Also heard from were representatives of the Students' Council, the McGill Union and the Arts and Commerce Undergraduates Societies. The speakers were applauded loudly and similar enthusiasm was shown at the sing-song which took place in the reading room.

The speakers were introduced by Bob Spencer, president of the Arts Undergraduate Society, whose humorous coupled with that of the speakers themselves kept the boys smiling and laughing most of the while. First to address the group was Gordon Young, president of the Students Council, who told the students that while the Freshmen-Reception Program ended with the banquet, the fun was not over and advised them in future to make it for themselves. Said he "You've got to work while you work, but don't work all the time and when you play, play hard."

Bob Spencer then introduced George MacDonald, president of the McGill Union and chairman of the committee supervising the Amalgamated Charities Campaign on the campus. After welcoming the freshmen to the Union, he urged them to aid the Charities drive to the limit and explained that while sufficient contributions were expected in one week, the campaign would be extended till the set quota was obtained.

Next to address the students were Melvin Malen, treasurer of the Arts Undergraduates Society and Tom Dailey, president of the Commerce Undergraduates Society, to welcome the newcomers to the

ARTS-SCIENCE FEUD BRINGS DAMAGES

Queens Students Enliven Elections by Boisterous Demonstrations

Kingston, Ont. (C.U.P.)—Several students suffered bruises and damage was done to the Arts Building at Queen's University Tuesday when arts and science students clashed as they left morning classes. Taking refuge in their own building, the arts students were bombarded with tomatoes, rotten eggs and flour sack bombs by the science men who took the offensive. Windows were broken and students inside were showered with broken glass. It was reported that at one stage of the battle a pop bottle and pieces of broken glass were used as ammunition.

The fracas was a prelude to the annual election of officers of the Alma Mater Society here today. The society is the University's student governing body and two candidates each from the arts, science and medical faculties and from the Levens Society are contesting the four executive positions.

The battle finally was halted when Principal R. C. Wallace was called to the scene. Bombardment of the Arts Building was halted after Dr. Wallace had remonstrated with the science students for several minutes.

"A disgraceful performance," he commented. "It is the worst possible way to win an election."

(For as many years back as we can remember, male and female students at McGill have been debating the question of whether or not women should be allowed into the Political Economy Club with full membership privileges. Both views are presented in the editorials which appear below. The first was contributed, the second, with which we still agree is a reprint of an editorial appearing in these columns on February 1st, 1939.)

Equal Rights for Women

A new movement has been gaining momentum on the Campus these last few days. The co-eds have taken up the old cry, demanding entry into the Political Economy Club. Ever since the inception of the club many years back, women, with any feeling for equality of the sexes, have been strong agitators for equal membership rights into this "second oldest club on the Campus." The head authorities have always refused to listen to their demands, basing their arguments on an outworn view, namely that women are not political-minded, that they have no sense of political values, nor do they understand its issues.

This view is very similar to the hackneyed phrase — women's place is in the home. Looking back over the history of western civilization for the past fifty years, we can trace a growing awareness on the part of men that women are in no sense inferior mentally to them, but that they merely need the opportunity of developing their minds beyond the usual domestic level in order to show their equal ability. Once women were given the chance of acquiring education, of freeing themselves from the "household bondage," of taking their place in the competitive economic world, there was no dispute of their mental capacity being equal to the male mind.

Women have excelled themselves in all walks of our social, economic, political and scientific life. There is not one occupation today at which women cannot, if given the opportunity, show an adeptness. As far back as Plato, equality of the sexes was urged. And although many centuries passed by before any measures were taken in that respect, yet today woman's right to enter any sphere of activity is regarded as a natural process of social development. To impede it in any way is to hinder social progress, and means reverting instead to a barbaric state, in which women were kept in ignorance, because man's ego so fancied it.

And so today, when the co-eds at McGill are sending around a petition, demanding the Political Economy Club to lower their prejudiced barriers against women, with the plea that women are every bit as interested in pertinent economic and political issues, as men, they are only demanding that the Executive become aware that it is impeding progress and is catering to a backward, decadent philosophy that is outworn and decrepit.

Women vs. a Club

The Political Economy Club was formed in 1912 as a men's organization. Since then, it has experienced marked growth, and has opened discussion on a

Defauw Conducts Brilliant Concert

The current season of Concerts Symphoniques opened auspiciously on Tuesday night with Desire Defauw at the head of the orchestra. Maestro Defauw came here with an American reputation based on four scintillating concerts with Toscanini's NBC Symphony

OPENED SEASON TUESDAY

DESIRE DEFAUW

Orchestra last Spring, and if Tuesday's concert may be taken as a criterion, he will, before long, be considered among the outstanding conductors on the continent. The program was traditional, being made up of favorite symphonic items by Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Brahms and Dukas and featured Mischa Elman as soloist in the Tchaikovsky D Major Concert.

A broad and deliberate performance of Beethoven's Coriolan Overture prepared the audience for an evening of great music, played with a sensitive aliveness to interpretation, tonal opulence and precision.

Elman's performance was in many ways admirable. With the legendary "Elman tone" very much in evidence, the haunting wistfulness of the Canzonetta touched no small part of the large audience that overflowed around the walls of the hall. The violinist was less at ease in the first movement, bristling with technical difficulties and ostentatious cadenza passages. While other virtuosi like Heifetz and Milstein carry these passages off with greater aplomb, Elman's rather free performance achieved a unity of mood that must have been wide variety of topics of current interest, largely in the field of economics. Its purpose has been to give economics students, and others interested in matters economic, a chance to air their views on current questions pertinent to that branch of study.

Owing to the increasing number of women registered in Economics and Political Science, a movement has been gaining momentum to allow them to participate in the Club's discussions. They feel, and perhaps rightly so, that they are being excluded from an opportunity to round out the courses they are pursuing in that Department.

Considerable opposition, however, has met the petition which they have presented. Members feel that the Club has functioned very well as an exclusive organization. For variety of reasons, there is danger that it would not operate nearly so well with such a new and disturbing element. Some of the reasons advanced are vague, some logical.

It has been proposed, by way of compromise, that women honouring in either economics or political science be allowed to attend the meetings. In fairness, it must be admitted that women students in economics have a right to participate in the activities of a department club.

We submit the following. An exclusive men's club has a number of merits from a selfish point of view. The quarter-century tradition has not been without foundation, and should not be lightly broken. If a large number of women are actively interested, the alternative is open to them to form an organization of their own; then, as an organization, to seek permission to hold joint meetings with the men's society.

Amalgamated Charities
Help and Be Glad You Can

very much in keeping with the composer's original intention.

The fine Allegro Vivacissimo was played perhaps too literally to achieve the dashing gypsy-like spirit of the music though the rubato sections left an impression of intense emotion.

As a willing concession to the many Elmanites who thronged to the concert, Mischa Elman offered the Bach-Wilhelmj "Air for the G String" with orchestral accompaniment. It provided an ideal medium for his luminous and profound legato tone.

Brahms Highlight

Unquestioned highlight of the program was an exceptional performance of Brahms Third Symphony in F. That Defauw understands Brahms was evident from the first few measures and that he translated Brahms' intricate score intelligently was evidenced from the prolonged applause that greeted the impressive finale. The symphonies of Johannes Brahms are essentially difficult to play well. The musical ideas are complex and must be worked out painstakingly. Each group of instruments carries a heavy load and it must be stated that the orchestra acquitted itself admirably in this, most difficult of symphonies. The plane is a lofty one, the mood one of exaltation, achieved through the use of a melodic line that features bold step-intervals which stalk through the work like gigantic strides. Maestro Defauw's interpretation mirrored the elevated philosophy of the mature Brahms as few conductors even the most celebrated have been able to achieve.

After the wise serenity of the Brahms symphony, programming Dukas' overplayed "Apprenti Sorcier" seemed an artistic faux pas. But the work was tackled on to complete a full-hour broadcast and turned out to be a delightful exhibition of orchestral virtuosity. Rather than stressing the hackneyed "broom" theme, which too many conductors have been guilty of, Desire Defauw emphasized the episodic nature of the score, discovering anew for an amazed audience hidden gems of orchestration and original writing.

ON THE AIR

Young Bizet

John Barbirolli gave music-lovers a treat last Sunday when he led the New York Philharmonic through a performance of Bizet's Symphony in C Major. The work, composed when Bizet was seventeen years old, is astonishingly interesting and mature. Full of beautiful themes expertly orchestrated and artistically presented, it definitely deserves a place in any music-lover's listening repertoire. The form is strict, the handling unpretentious. At times the influence of Beethoven and of Mozart is unmistakable. But the symphony says something: there is intelligence in the themes and cunning in the orchestration; there is harmony and counterpoint understood and used in a manner remarkable for a lad of seventeen. The fact that Bizet had to spend his time writing operas is deplorable. He might have been a great symphonist.

Mozart Misinterpreted

There is no denying that Hans Wilhelm Steinberg is a good conductor, but he is far from great. Leading the NBC Symphony last Saturday in a performance of Mozart's E flat Symphony, No. 39, he showed an amazing amount of misunderstanding. He played the second movement too quickly and prevented the music from declaring its values; the third movement was too heavy and plodding; the last movement was clumsy and somewhat aimless. Steinberg did not understand the Mozart E flat Symphony.

Bernie Again

Ben Bernie is weekly giving the public a headache for good old Bromo-Seltzer. That may be his preconceived chief function and, if so, he and his sponsor ought to be viciously suppressed. As a comedian he rates just about zero; to hear something funny from him is a pleasure, alas, impossible to enjoy. As a singer he is entirely a negative quantity: that monotone excuse for a song of his is nauseating even in small quantities. And the commercials further tend to produce headaches. Therefore on Tuesdays at 9 you can hear a rather successful show, from the point of view of the sponsor.

Basin Street

For real fun and excellent swing, boogie-woogie, etc., the "Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street" cannot be missed. The music, arranged for such unusual swing instruments as the oboe, bassoon, and bass clarinet, is played by expert musicians. The numbers are announced by Dr. Gino Hamilton, who tells the world that Dr. Wolfgang Amadeus Levine and Dr. Johann Sebastian Adler will interpolate hot passages for the trumpet and saxophone. Last week an intermission talk was given about the love life of the inverted subdominant seventh chord, with reference to the Brooklyn Romantic School of Music. (Mondays at 10, CECE).

Not-so-hot Oboler

Out-of-town-reception was excellent last Friday and Arch Oboler's "Everyman's Theatre" came through clearly for the first time since this series began. Apparently Oboler is either less energetic or overcautious because of his sponsor. "Cat Wife" was obviously an early play of his, and perhaps it did not deserve a rehearsing. It frankly entered the field of the supernatural, with Oboler, to be on the safe side, adding, "Just for fun."

He toyed with the idea of a husband and wife quarrelling; of his calling her a cat; and of her transformation, meowing and developing claws and fangs. It sounds silly on paper, but it was effective and scary last Friday night.

An example of Oboler's technique: the husband and wife are quarrelling; he loves her despite her drunken sprees and contempt for him; she, drunk, says she married him for his money; he calls her a cat; she pours forth abuse and he repeats, "a cat, a cat"; her mind suddenly clears up; no longer drunk she begs (Continued on Page Four)

Sparks From The Forge

By Katinka Akins

"The Forge" is self styled "McGill's only literary magazine." It is not the only magazine on the campus, but it is the only magazine whose aim it is to represent the entire university. Of late there has been a tendency to regard "The Forge" as the magazine of the Arts Faculty. This is an attitude which we wish to break down. It is no more the magazine of the Arts Faculty than it is of any other faculty—hence the title, "McGill's only literary magazine." This is a point which we feel cannot be stressed too strongly.

The greatest criticism of "The Forge" has come, not in positive form from people who have read it, but in negative form from the people who have not read it simply because they were not interested in it, or for some reason felt vaguely antagonistic towards it. Why is this? I think the bug-bear here is the word literary. This is a word that has in the past taken a considerable beating. Through unfortunate association and implication it has taken on a farcical quality. It conjures up in the mind a picture of a long-haired aesthete who wears peculiar ties, writes Jabberwockian nonsense, and possesses dubious morals. It has become the stereotyped word of pseudo-Bohemianism. It has in fact been unfairly treated.

My own definition of the word literary is intelligent literacy. Perhaps I had better explain at this point the meaning I attach to the word literary. In its general sense it means anyone who can read and write. I have narrowed it down to something more specific, and when I speak of a literary person I mean one who writes good lucid prose. If such a person chose to write about the drainage system of Ancient Rome, it would be, regardless of its interest to the general public, a literary effort.

There are very few people in a university who do not have pretty definite ideas on some subject or other, and given an opportunity they will discuss them with enthusiasm and intelligence. Why not write of your ideas instead of just talking about them, and so, to use a fairly trite phrase, "preserve them for posterity?" Maybe they aren't worth preserving, but on the other hand, and this seems to me more likely, maybe they are. In any event posterity is certainly the best judge of that, if you will only give it the opportunity.

One of the aims of The Forge has been to foster creative writing in the University in the field of poetry and fiction. This is still its aim, because we realize in so doing we are serving a valuable purpose. However, as it stands now the magazine is not so representative as we would wish it to be. It has been criticized for the narrowness of its appeal. We accept the criticism, and will do our best to enlarge its appeal. But in order to do that we need the co-operation of those people who criticize us. And when I say co-operation I don't mean lethargic agreement with the policy that has been outlined; I mean active co-operation in the way that has been suggested, because only in that way can "The Forge" be what it is intended to be—the magazine of McGill University.

Army Gridders Torpedoed By Navy in Opening Tilt

Stu Smith's Squad Overpowers Army by 18-1 Score—Bill Stronach Turns In Fine Game for Losers

By A.D.M.

Sailing through a wet, slippery, muddy field, Stu Smith's Navy gridders yesterday handily defeated the Army aggregation, coached by Johnny Cloughessy, at Molson Stadium. The victors were aided by several costly Army miscues in running up an 18-1 score, but had a decided edge in the play throughout.

Play was rough during the entire battle, but no serious injuries occurred. Bill Stronach, who played a bang-up game at quarter for the losers, sustained a slight hip injury in the third period, but was able to return during the last few minutes of the contest.

The Navy outfit opened the scoring in the opening minutes when Smith was fouled for a single. The Army were evidently confusing their signals, and a few disastrous fumbles soon after led to the first unconverted major score against them.

SIMPSON SHINES

A safety touch increased the lead to 8-0 in the second quarter. The Navy were really sizzling in this period, and Simpson gave a fine exhibition of blocking and tackling, continually breaking through to smother Army plays before they could get started. The winners' plays were running smoothly and their kicking was superior. Play continued for the most part in Army territory, but no further scoring resulted before the close of the half.

An Army fumble in the shadow of their own goalposts, led to a quick Navy touchdown at the beginning of the second half, as Cuke broke through to cross the line standing up. However, they struck right back led by Stronach, who finally broke the ice with a long kick that went for a rouge.

ARMY TAKES TO THE AIR

The fourth quarter saw Stronach and Smith open a spirited aerial attack for the Army, but the Navy came surging back to dent the enemy goal line on a brilliant 25-yard end run. This made the count 18-1 and that's the way it ended.

Simpson was the outstanding offensive and defensive hero for the victors, while Bill Stronach's stellar play saved the Army from a complete rout.

Football chief Doug Kerr was a spectator at this opening game.

Harriers to Run In Dunlop Meet

Inter-company Competition to Be Attempted Along With Strong First Team

Once again McGill's famed distance runners take to serious competition and this time against the provinces best hoofers in the annual Dunlop road race. The event will take place on Saturday afternoon, November 9, and will start at the usual spot, the North Branch Y.M.C.A. Sport enthusiasts will recall that McGill teams have won the team prize for several seasons in a row and have at the same time managed to place a McGill man in first position for most of these races. Last fall Glenn Cowan romped home in first place to lead a strong McGill team to victory and the year before Lloyd Cooke came close to breaking the existing record to win the event.

RACE TO BE HELD.

It was feared that owing to the war no race would be held this year, but officials have seen fit to carry on, feeling that the race might be not only of value and interest to local runners, but could, as well, be of great value to the Military authorities in their physical training schemes. An attempt is being made to have this meet in the form of an inter-company meet for McGill men and to try and get as many entrants as possible. There would be one strong team representing McGill, but as well a score of other McGill men, as many as desired would enter the race, and we would count our own score per company regardless of the outcome of the race itself and the non-university competitors.

Several of last year's championship Intercollegiate team are back at school and have already shown evidence of serious training in the Intercompany track meet.

TRAINING UNDERWAY.

Joe Berman who placed second in the intercollegiate meet at Kingston last fall ran a fast three miles in Friday's meet and has been training steadily for the Dunlop contest. Reid Hyde also a former intercollegiate man showed excellent form in pressing Berman closely on Friday and has also been training seriously, along with Ein Ross and Glenn Cowan and several newcomers.

All those desirous of getting into this race and other races of a similar nature which are being planned will please get in touch with coach Van Wagner in the Gymnasium or appear at the Gym at 5 p.m. any night this week for practice runs with other runners. The length of the Dunlop run is five miles but there is sufficient time for any man turning out to get into condition to cover the distance. McGill men will be heartened by the fact that most of the entrants in the race will have no more training under their belts than those who begin training at this time since the race has just been announced.

HENNEMAN MOVES INTO SEMI-FINALS

Once again inclement weather held up the continuance of the long drawn-out inter-faculty tennis tournament. However one match was run off at lunch yesterday, before the rain put a stop to activities, in which E. Henneman defeated H. Lalonde in a decisive victory, 6-2, 6-0. The former had previously won over R. Robinson, who was seeded second, while Lalonde had defeated another seeded player, Thompson.

Yesterday's match may prove to be an indication of the final result of the matches, for Henneman showed signs of a real champion. If all goes well today, J. Richer will meet Finlay in a quarter-final match, with P. Landry vs. E. Henneman in a semi-final.

Lately with the early frost, thawing, and rain, the courts have been left in pretty bad condition; however it is now showing signs of clearing up and it is hoped that the remaining competitors will finish up within the week. This tournament has now been running for about three weeks and tennis is certainly not a winter sport.

INTRAMURAL

PLATOON SPORTS REPRESENTATIVES

All the Platoon Sports Representatives have been supplied with a Questionnaire in which all students are requested to indicate their favorite sport in which they are prepared to participate during the coming season. So far, returns are coming in at a very encouraging rate and if the remainder are as interesting, the Intercompany Point Participation scheme will be a great success.

Following the practice of having experts demonstrate their particular sport at the beginning of the season, the same practice will be followed in respect to volleyball, table tennis, weightlifting, fencing, boxing, and wrestling. So be on the lookout for announcements of these coming events.

The whole plan and purpose behind all this is to stimulate interest and participation in sports for sports sake and for the development of physical fitness and a better esprit de corps among McGill students in general and members of the various Companies in particular.

Swimming and water polo is next on the list for a campaign, so, all you natorial experts, would-be experts, and especially novices start in and get out to the Knights of Columbus Pool at 191 Mountain Street for some practice. On Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays from 5.30 until 6.45 p.m. Leadership will be provided soon for beginners in Swimming, Life Saving and Water Polo, and it is hoped if sufficient interest is shown that an Inter-Company Water Polo League will be formed. NOW it is up to YOU.

SOCCER

There was a very poor turnout of Soccerites yesterday at the Upper Field and we know that there is more interest in this sport from personal contact with its members. We'll, however, try again, so NOW, another practice will be called for those interested to turn out today with or without tops. COME ON OUT, gang and show the challengers what you can do, or can you? TODAY, UPPER FIELD, 4.30 p.m. or as soon as possible after that time.

"Get Fit and Keep Fit"

SQUAD LEADERS

Thirty-five men have answered the call for Squad Leaders to date. Every Company is now represented and more than half of the Platoons have at least one man on deck. MORE MEN ARE NEEDED. The Leaders Corps needs a total of some 60 men (two from each Platoon) to reach its full quota. There is room for an additional 25 men. If you have ever given any leadership in P.T. work whether in High School, College or other Association then you are the man we want. Leaders are needed to assist with the regular calisthenics periods, to act as demonstrators and instructors on the various pieces of gymnastic apparatus to assist with the recreative program and to act as officials and recorders in the Fitness Efficiency Testing scheme.

Experience as a 'leader' is not a necessary requisite. Perhaps you have been a member of a school or college gymnastic team, perhaps you are possessed of natural athletic ability or maybe you are just keenly interested in becoming a proficient all-round P.T. leader. Whatever the case you are welcome to come out and join the Squad Leaders Corps. Instructional periods are being held every Tuesday and Thursday from 5.00 to 6.00 p.m. and from 6.00 to 7.00 p.m. If you are interested then come out to the next class.

All the work to be taken is primarily of an elementary nature. At present the squad is learning fundamental movements on the mats, vaulting horse, side horse, horizontal bar, and parallel bars. The exercises are well within the limit of any average student and with a little application one should be able to become quite proficient on all pieces of apparatus. Other phases to be studied are straight class work or calisthenics which go to make up the Formal P.T. periods, group games, recreative activities and efficiency tests.

As soon as the leaders-in-training have proven themselves capable of assuming the full responsibilities of a Squad Leader they will be called upon to assist with the more diversified Physical Education Program to which the members of the McGill Reserve Battalion will be introduced in the near future.

The following men are asked to report at tonight's practice (plus any others who are interested): Norman Taylor, Ernest Skutoczky, George Ling, Bill Weber, E. G. Mahon, Stan Knox, Wm. Braye, Paul Byers, F. A. Horning, L. Sabbath, S. Dembicki, Warren T. Canniff, Hyman Herschman, George Bowen, J. Massue, H. McClymont, Basil Burgess, Al Pue-Gilchrist, G. A. Leonards, N. Holland, Art Henderson, Dave Singerman, D. N. Solomon, Dick Stevenson, Ross McConnell, Ronald Bayne, Robert Collier, Leonard McCallum, Bob Forrester, John Simpson, Guy Royer, Blake Robinson, and W. Savage.

Call Names for B.F.&W. Classes

Entrants Urged to Sign Up. Classes Start With Few More Names on List

The boxing, wrestling and fencing list for prospective entrants, posted in the locker room of the gymnasium, is rapidly filling up, but they are still short of the required number. These lists must be filled before a coach can be hired, so it is urged that those who are in any way interested in boxing, wrestling or fencing, whether they have had any previous experience or not, sign up as soon as possible so that classes may be started shortly.

Under the careful guidance of an expert coach, each student will receive a thorough training in whichever of the body building sports chosen, thus there should be plenty of evidence of the skill acquired during the classes shown by those who enter the proposed inter-company assault at arms to be held in December.

It has been suggested that the classes be held between 6 and 8 Tuesday and Thursday evenings. However, there may also be later classes on Monday and Wednesday or Friday evenings, for those who are otherwise occupied during the earlier hour. This will be a splendid opportunity for those students with little or no time during the day to get in plenty of exercise and at the same time gain proficiency in these excellent sports.

The weight lifting entry list, also posted in the gym, is almost complete insofar as the authorization of a coach is concerned. Before a coach may be hired, all these lists must be completed. Thus, all those who have any intention of participating in boxing, wrestling, fencing or weight lifting, are strongly urged to sign up immediately.
